John A. Taylor, who was applauded on rising, spoke in part as follows:

Mr. President, you have bidden in the past to this festal table many distinguished guests—so many and so distinguished that no author, soldier or statesman has been so well and favorably known in our country that he has not taken on an added dignity to find, at some climax of his career, his forehead crowned with the flowers of your lotos wreaths and his ears saluted by the seductive music of your lotos praises. But never have you invited us to drain our glasses to one of all that honore i and historic list of men to whom our hearts have gone out in a more spontaneous response than to him whose auspicious future we piedge to-night (Applause.)

Applause.)
For more than a human generation he has been holding before us those matchless pictures of human fellowship which, masked in different characters upon the play-bills, have been but poor and shifty devices for opening to our delighted vision the gateway of his generous heart and bidding us all to saunter down the pleasant paths that led to his own gracious presence. (Cheers.)

saunter down the pleasant pand bidding us all to gracious presence. (Cheers.)

For who among us has been so blinded to his own picture on the stage that we have not seen behind the pinched and heart-wearled face of Caleb Plummer the warm and glowing personality of our guest, and under the frayed buckskin of Rip Van Winkle that splendid fund of kindly human nature that irradiated the sodden stupidity of the Dutchman and crowned it with the divine attribute of self-surrender?

So that of all the divine attribute of self-sur-and crowned it with the divine attribute or sen-aurender?

So that of all the thousands who have been inspired and exalted by our honored guest, there is not one sitting here to-night who would hesitate to reach his palm across the table to our friend and expect to find it grasped with that genial pressure of response which is born of a perennial fund of maniy fellowship.

And do you say that for a man to thus carry himself for half a century is not to signalize himself among his kind? I will answer that it bespeaks the highest and worthlest combination of human attributes.

that you can eladly understand that the thing there is about you which we do most of all admire and love is not the consummate skill and art with which you have, with such surpassing success, so fashioned the portraits which you have given us behind the footights, but that everywhere and all the time through your public career of half a century you have depicted no human quality of mind and heart which could for a moment compare with what we knew you all the time yourself to be a man of men, a prince of good fellows, a loving husband, a noble citizen and a true friend. (Enthuslastic applause)

THE GUEST OF HONOR CHEERED.

Joseph Jefferson, in rising to respond, was greeted with round upon round of applause. Mr. Jefferson spoke throughout in an admirable and extremely happy vein, and when he became reminiscent his anecdotes were characterized with a humor that was irresistible. Speaking of the warm welcome accorded him, Mr. Jefferson said:

was irresistible. Speaking of the warm welcome accorded him, Mr. Jefferson said:

If a theatrical star got applause like that how much better the acting would be. Frankly I had no idea that I was such a good man until I heard your president make those few remarks. It is most empleated that I was such a good man until I heard your president make those few remarks. It is most emplearnassing to be so respectable. (Laughter.) In the "School for Scandal." the lawyer, I think, after having done a good action says: "Ladles and gentiemen, I rope you will not mention this matter, and Sr I rope you will not mention this matter, and Sr I swyer answers. 'No, but I live by the badness of my character and if it was known that I did an honorable thing it might rain my reputation. (Laughter.) Well, gentlemen, I hope you will not let this get any further, otherwise if I did not do some drealful deed shortly my friends would begin to respect me frenewed laughter). But it is natural that I should be very much moved by a reception given to me like this in the city of New-York.

You will be surprised when I tell you that my first theatrical appearance in New-York was nearly sixty years ago. In looking over "freland's History of I presume, was myself, in the year 1837 appeared for the benefit of one Master Titus. The said Joseph Jefferson, I find, also, was seven or eight years old, and the age of the beneficiary was about ten. We were announced to appear in a terrific combat. (Laughter.) It is hardly to be believed that the link habitants chould have permitted such an exhibition. I was dressed as a Spanish pirate, or privateer, or something of that kind; the beneficiary was dressed as an American sailor, and I was to be overcome by him. (Laughter.) I had no political opinion on this matter; it was purely professional. (Increased merriment.) And as I lay on the stage with the American sailor placing his foot on my breast and waving the star-spangled banner, the curtain came down amid applause. I remember the circumstance perfectly,

APOLOGY FOR "TALKING SHOP." After pausing sufficiently long to excuse himself for "talking shop," in reply to which he received loudly uttered invitations to talk further on the incidents of his life, a recital which, Mr. Jefferson mentioned parenthetically, would keep him talking all night, he again became reminiscent. He referred to the period of his life when he and his father were in some degree itinerant managers. In their journeys they found themselves at length at Springfield, Iii. "And we were about to open there," he continued, "when we found that a religious revival was taking place in the town and a prohibitory license was placed upon our performance. While we were in this dilemma a young lawyer came forward and offered his services to us, with a view of getting the prohibition removed. By his wit and humor and fine speech he did get that prohibition removed. That lawyer, who afterward became one of the foremost men in the country, lies buried near the town of Springfield, with the life and virtues recorded of Abraham Lincoln. (Loud cheers.) Time went on, and I find myself in New-Orleans on some patriotic occasion. It was decided to have the 'Star Spangled Banner' sung by the company, and I was deputed to sing the first verse. I had a good voice at that time, and used to lead the chorus, but where I led them I had not the slightest idea. I was never so nervous in my life as on that occasion, and I studied the verse ball! I knew it backward, and I am afraid that I sang it backward, too, and I am afraid that I sang it backward, too, and again, but I stuck on the first line each time, and I was regularly hissed from the stage. I staggered to the wings, where my mother was standing, and we cried it out together. I am fairly patriotic, but on this occasion I must concess I cursed the National anthem from the bottom of my heart."

Mr. Jefferson proceeded to entertain his auditors with several more interesting and wittily told reminiscences and closed his remarks amid appliause, with expressions of gratitude for the kind welcome with expressions of gratitude for the kind welcome and reception he had received from the members of the Lotos Club.

MONY-HOW ADMISSION TO THE CHURCH,

The arrangements for the marriage of ex-

President Benjamin Harrison and Mrs. Mary Scott Lord Dimmick, which will take place in St. Thomas's Church, Fifth-ave, and Fifty-third-st., to-morrow, are made, and everything is practically in readiness for the ceremony. The fact that the wedding is to be private and emphasized. The hour at which the ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Dr. J. Wesley Brown, the rector of St. Thomas's, is still a secret, so far as any information from either General Harrison or Mrs. Dimmick on that particular point is concerned, but it is understood that the marriage ceremony will take place at about 4:30 o'clock.

The guests invited will be admitted to the church through the small door in Fifty-third-st., than thirty persons present in the church to witness the ceremony. So strict are the orders to prevent the presence of an unbidden guest flowers have been furnished with tickets of admission to the building. These tickets, however, do not permit the men to remain for the ceremony.

DECORATION OF THE CHANCEL The floral embellishment of the chancel is not to be elaborate. The wall behind the altar, where there are some excellent paintings, is not there will be a tasteful display of Easter lilies, which, with groups of fresh white and paletinted purple lilacs, will be the principal flowers used in the decorations. There will also be a background for the Illies and Illaes, which will be massed on either side of the chancel steps. There will be a cluster or two of roses on the altar, and some spring flowers in front of the first pews in the middle aisle.

There will be little music. George William Warren, the regular organist of the church, will perform a few selections before the bride arcel he will play the "Lohengrin" wedding march. It is distinctly said that there will be no vocal music.

The General has been seen rarely in the dining-room since his arrival in the city, as he has had his meals, as a rule, served in his room, and done all he could to avoid public notice. His only companions have been his private secretary, Mr. Tibbott, and Mr. Ramsdell, save General Tracy, who called upon him frequently. Yesterday forenoon, after eating breakfast

In this diagram a continuous white line shows the changes in pressure as indicated by The Tribune's self-repording barometer. The dotted line represents the temperature recorded at Perry's Pharmacy. Yesterday forenoon, after eating breakfast with General Tracy, the ex-President, accompanied by Mr. Tibbott, went out to attend to some details concerning his forthcoming marriage. Mr. Ramsdell remained at the hotel. Later in the day General Harrison called upon Mrs. Dimmick.

General John W. Noble, ex-Secretary of the Interior under General Harrison, has sent his regrets, and will be unable to attend the wedding. Ex-Secretary Charles Foster has not yet been heard from, and a note has been received from a sen of John Wanamaker saying that owing to his father's absence in Europe the ex-Postmaster-General will be unable to be present.

Outside of these men, all others who were in General Harrison's Cabinet are expected to be in the city and attend the wedding.

The wedding presents and cards have already begun to reach the Fifth Avenue Hotel, but no names of the senders or description of the articles received will be given out.

It has been reported that it would take place at one time and another and in one place and another, and it has been rumored that it had already taken place, and there have been as many denials as reports.

The ceremony yesterday was performed by the Rev. John M. Kiely. There was only a small party present, it consisted of the mother and two sisters of the bride, Thomas and George Miner, sons of the bridegroom: Dr. Joseph T. Davis and T. W. Moore. Edwin D. Miner, to whom the account of the wedding is due, said that he was not present himself. He said that his father and his wife had started at once for Virginia on a wedding tour. that the depositions taken in Newark behind locked doors, upon which the Chancellor wrote his opinion, have not yet been filed, coupled with the fact that the numerous orders, petitions and bills have left the Chancery office records for some reason, has revived interest in the case.

Some one in the office of the Clerk of Chancery has been interested in the suit from its beginning, and even when the Chancellor filed his opinion, which he wrote upon the depositions taken secretly in a lawyer's office in Newark, the opinion was not sent out in the ordinary way, but was addressed personally to Colonel S. M. Dickinson, the chief cierk in the chancery office. The usual custom is to have the testimony upon which the decree or opinion is based filed in the chancery office at the same time the opinion is filed, but the testimony taken in the Drayton case has not yet reached the State House. In fact, none of the original papers are on file at present, but these may be with Chancellor McGill in his private office in Jersey City, they having been required to assist him in making up his opinion. If the testimony upon which the Chancellor based his opinion granting Mrs. Drayton a decree of divorce for desertion has been filed in the chancery office by him there is no record of it in the dockets.
